CONVINCING YOU TO READ THESE BOOKS BASED OFF THEIR FIRST LINE

"I've never understood why humans have to make it so difficult to fall in love."

"I used to think that only Catholics could have guardian angels. Then my Uncle Herman told me that Jews believe in them, too. I decided that mine would be Eleanor Roosevelt, for reasons way beyond our shared name."

"It's an honor to be waiting outside the school gates in the winter cold.

This is what I've been telling myself for the past hour, as I shiver in my ironed blazer and watch my fingernails turn a concerning shade of purple.

It's an immense honor. "

" I'm about to change into my school uniform when I notice the man floating outside my bedroom window.

No, floating isn't the right word, I realize as I step closer, my plaid skirt still crumpled in one hand, my pulse racing in my ears. He's dangling."

"Emerson Ness had not been scared in a very long time. Now, she was terrified."

"She meant to burn it down. The house, with its pitched gables and chipped paint. The roof was fringed in moss, and there was something undeniably morose about it—the way it sagged, the way the wrought iron parapets of the widow's watch had gone red with rust."

"The first time Shea Davidson surfaced on my screen, she danced a ballet, hip-hop hybrid that had my feet moving below my seat. She cleared leaps that I'd only seen other creators make with trampolines and ice skates."

"The villa is still and cold in the dawn, but not as cold and still as the bed next to me. I look at it, the pillow untouched, the bed sheet still tucked in.

It's been five years since my sister last lay in the bedroom beside me, but I still catch my breath every morning; I still ready myself as I turn to face the emptiness. "
